Hearst Free Library has kept local readers reading for over a century

The Hearst Free Library, which is listed on the National Register of Historic Buildings, was donated to the city of Anaconda by Phoebe Hearst, whose husband invested with Marcus Daly in the Montana copper industry.

Although Hearst had sold her interest in the Anaconda Copper Mining Co. when she came here in 1895, she asked the city fathers what she could do for the town.

When they hesitated, she said, "I have an idea, I have in mind a library." They replied, "That is what we need, and what we want."

Asked by the gracious lady why they hadn't told her sooner, officials replied that a library would cost too much money and they did not want to impose on her.

When the Hearst Free Library opened its doors on June 12, 1898, the Anaconda Standard reported:

"In a commanding position on Main Street, with lines of impressive, classical beauty, stands the Hearst Free Public Library, a gift to the people of Anaconda from Mrs. Phoebe Hearst.

"The first impression one receives is of massive substantiality, an effect which is heightened by the strikingly Grecian purity of outline and the almost severe use of ornamentation which by itself would give an impression of stiffness were it not for the graceful strength imparted to the design by the great spreading arches of the windows.

The building is one of the best type of library structure, and has none equal in Montana; it will compare favorably with any public building in the West."

The library's doors opened to the public June 1, 1898, and are still open. Librarians stand ready to serve the community of Anaconda — more than a century after the doors first swung open. Inside you'll find the original woodwork, lights and ornate architect along side modern conveniences like computers and a Wi-Fi hot spot.

Hearst Free Library at Fourth and Main streets is a piece of living history. Established by Phoebe Hearst, wife of mining magnate George Hearst and mother of newspaper baron William Randolph Hearst, the historic structure opened in 1898 and still serves Anaconda's readers and book lovers.
